The frontispiece, always in this extensive publication, is a photograph of Ferdinand Halbbull's picture "The Summer Day" was one of the very best, we are told, in last year, and an admirable illustration of a side of the life in the peninsula. The picture is a modern, and shows the contrast between modern and woman in the costumes of to-day, and the landscape in which these figures are set. A. F. Sir.—Forty years ago, when on a tour, we were in Boston, and saw a number of the old men of the city about 30 consumers in the street cars who were defrauding the Metropolitan Tramway Company. The same cheat which is so rife now was then was used then, viz., the "bell ring" was found to be totally inefficient, and every man had his own bell. It is very probable that there have in many cases a small bell concealed ran the concealed bell. This was the common device, but other forms were found. The Metropolitan Transitway Company immediately abolished all but the simple bell. The device is not an ordinary clock. This is put up at the end of the view of all the passengers, and by pulling a rope to it, and running along the side of the car, the pull registers a fare or a penny, as may be desired. The device is not a clock, but a register. The register is not only visible on the dial, but is also visible every passenger on that part of the car, top or bottom. Immediately this dial register was adopted it brought 30 per cent. Soaring this, a foreigner brought it to Sydney. He showed it to the police, who immediately explained that the foreign registers were in Boston; but was poor-poached the device of the game was too loud, would annoy passengers.

mode of registry—audible and plainly visible the car full of passengers—no fraud could be shown them how that could be supplemented check, as in Dublin, viz., by giving each passenger a receipt for the ticket, and the receipt for roll of consecutively numbered tickets. Once torn off the conductor is accountable. How conductor in doubt now whether a passenger is not? Any bold swindler can travel half the Empire without detection, and no one is the wiser. The collected tickets, daily register, of the roll of receipts ought to prove each other. I spend. I lost £25 by this effort, and I believe have lost £25,000 per annum by not adopting it.

interest to some of your readers to know the story of the first tram line in Sydney, which was built on some English tram-lines. The line of water, so your knowledge was opened about five years ago over very steep gradients: the population served was smaller than that of Sydney, and although I think, lower, the company has paid dividends of 10 per cent. It is worked by steam; service is each 15 minutes, cars stop at stations and to pick up and drop off passengers. The length of line is not very great, but is well served. I wish to learn anything that those used to live divided into four lengths—fare, 2d. each half length.

GOVERNORSHIP OF SOUTH AUSTRALIA.

LONDON, JULY 18.

It is reported that the Marquis of Normanby, formerly Governor of Victoria, will be appointed Governor of South Australia, in succession to Sir W. C. F. Robinson.

MR. PARNELL AND THE TIMES.

LONDON, JULY 18.

It is likely that Mr. Parnell will claim that the inquiry of which he has given notice shall be limited to the authenticity of the letters which were produced in the late libel action against the Times.

The Times insists that in the event of an inquiry being instituted, the whole of the charges shall be included.

The Right Hon. W. H. Smith offers, on behalf of the Government, to appoint a commission, composed mainly of the Judges, to hear the charges which the Times made against Mr. Parnell.

THE LIBEL ACTION AGAINST THE TIMES.

THE LETTERS PRODUCED BY THE DEFENCE DECLARED BY MR. PARNELL TO BE FORGERIES.

THE TIMES CHALLENGED TO DISPROVE THE STATEMENT.

(BY CABLE.)

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

LONDON, JULY 18.

In the House of Commons last evening Mr. Parnell declared that the letters produced by Sir Richard Webster, Q.C., counsel for the defence in the libel action O'Donnell v. the Times (in which a verdict was returned for the defendant with costs), and purporting to have been written at various times by Messrs. Parnell, Egan, and Byrne, were forgeries.

The other London journals insist that a simple denial by the Times that the letters were not forgeries is valueless, and they challenge the Times to disprove the allegation made by Mr. Parnell.

In the House of Commons Mr. Parnell applied for the appointment of a committee to inquire into the authenticity of the letter purporting to have been written by him.

The Right Hon. W. H. Smith, on behalf of the Government, refused to sanction the appointment of the committee, as Parliament was incompetent to deal with such charges while the courts of justice were available.

Mr. Parnell thereupon gave notice that he would move for the appointment of a committee of inquiry.

Mr. O'Donnell's solicitor declares that every step that was taken in the late action against the Times was submitted to Mr. Parnell for his approval.

The Times declines to agree to any inquiry into the authenticity of the letters produced at the late trial if the inquiry is of a limited character. It regards Mr. Parnell's motion, of which he has given notice in the House of Commons, as a sham.

THE RISING IN ZULULU.

MENACING ATTITUDE OF DINIZULU.

ADVANCE OF THE BRITISH FORCE.

THE TRANSVAAL GOVERNMENT SUPPORT THE BRITISH.

(BY CABLE.)

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

LONDON, JULY 18.

Latest advices from Natal state that many Zulu chiefs and Boers are joining the forces of the Zulu chief Dinizulu, who has assumed a very menacing attitude towards the British.

Lord Knutsford stated in the House of Lords last night that her Majesty's Government were in possession of intelligence to the effect that the rising in Zululand had assumed very serious proportions. Dinizulu had assembled 4000 Zulus at Cega, (?) in Zululand.

General Smyth, who recently arrived at Natal to take command of the British forces, is now advancing against the rebel Zulus, with a force of 16,000 men under his command.

The Transvaal Government has resolved to support the British.

(It will be seen from the above intelligence that affairs in Zululand have taken a new turn. In 1866, a large portion of the territory having been occupied by Boers, the country was divided into three parts: the Northern portion which the Queen exercised a protectorate, the New River Republic, and Eastern Zululand. The question then arose as to whether the Zulus should govern themselves or be governed by Great Britain. As it was thought that it was impossible for the Zulus to continue to exist as an independent nation, the Zulus were annexed to the British Empire in 1877, the area of British Zululand embracing 2604 square miles. During the early part of the negotiations Dinizulu and other chiefs, by the advice of certain white men, attempted to re-open the general question of the division; but they afterwards signified their assent to the arrangement. To meet the difficulty of legislation and jurisdiction over the Zulus, the Government of the Cape Colony, a few members of the Council, governed the country, making the laws by proclamation. Dinizulu now appears to be dissatisfied with the arrangement, and probably there may be grave trouble over it before the matter is settled.)

line. For it we must look by way of the Pacific. An alternate Asiatic line would not meet our case. The disturbances which would cause an interruption on one Asiatic line might cause it on another, and there would not be the same number of chances in our favour with lines running through Asia as if one of them passed westward through another hemisphere. The Eastern Extension Company intend to give us another land line to Western Australia, and another line still has been contracted for between that colony and Asia; but these are insufficient for our needs. They will give us the benefit of increased chances of keeping up communication with Asia, but further than that they do not go. It would be an unlikely thing, however, for a cable through Asia and a cable through Canada or the United States to be interrupted at the same time. It is therefore time we had begun to think very seriously about entering into negotiations for the establishment of this new line. H.M.S. Egeria has been employed by the Imperial Government for some time in surveying the Pacific to British Columbia, but for one ship such a work is a matter not of months, but of years. The Postal Conference held in Sydney in January last decided that an immediate survey ought to be made, and the SECRETARY FOR THE COLONIES was communicated with on the subject. No definite reply has yet been given, but it would not appear that the first communication of Lord Knutsford was full of hope, and it is only activity on our part that will secure what is so great a necessity. Get the alternate line we must. To go on as we are is only to play into the hands of circumstances, and trust to Providence then to deliver us. Some great war in which Australia might be involved would drive us to desperate attempts to gain this alternate line. By a little use of the imagination, however, the condition in which we should be placed in case of war may be seen, and the same results may be achieved. We require to be in immediate and constant contact with the great national circumstances of Europe. We are no longer a handful of people, of no account to the nations over the water. They value our trade and our commercial patronage, and we can best retain and develop the advantages arising from this condition by taking the means to secure uninterrupted communication with them. We are not in the position of such countries as Canada or the United States, which under any circumstances will never be more than a week behind in their communication. Mail matter can be carried in that time across the Atlantic. The Pacific cable route would cost us a good deal of money; but convenience in these days is money, and we have none too much of either that we should fail to secure profit when we may.

The representative of the Government in the Upper House has announced that the Property Tax Bill is not to be proceeded with, and we may suppose that the Council has practically shelved the Land Tax Bill. As to this second bill, our readers will remember that on Tuesday the motion that the second reading be made an order of the day for Wednesday was only passed by the casting vote of the PRESIDENT; and last evening a motion was carried, by 28 to 10 votes, that the debate on the second reading be postponed until Tuesday next. So that if Parliament prorogues on that day we shall have no more of the Land Tax Bill, and thus the financial measures of the Government, for this session at least, will be lost. One thing we may regret that these measures should have caused such an enormous waste of time. No small part of this wearisome session has been consumed over the Land Bill, the Property Tax Bill, and the Land Tax Bill. No doubt this is very humiliating to the Government; and that the attempt to introduce direct taxation has proved a failure will also be regarded as a triumph for the Opposition. We have all along contended that there should be direct taxation. We have regarded the Land Tax Bill as sound in principle, and we have always held that the Property Tax Bill is the complement of the Land Tax Bill. At the same time it is not to be wondered at that the Council should raise the objections they did. There are two things they naturally took into account. The first is the late period at which these measures reached them. The Houses have off and on been sitting since September last, about ten months altogether, and now, just within one week before the time at which it is announced that the session will close, the Council receives the bills which the Government regarded as of the most important character; for it must be remembered that they came into office to set the finances in order, and these measures form an important part of their scheme. Anxious as we are to see the finances settled, and firmly as we believe in the principle on which these measures are founded, we cannot be surprised that the Council should ask for time for full consideration. In the second place, it is not surprising that the Council should be influenced by the statement of the Colonial Treasurer, that with the new surplus of £500,000. That after deducting £270,000 on account of these measures, there would still be a surplus of over £180,000, would naturally create in their minds the feeling that the new taxation was not needed to meet an annual payment of £250,000 only in respect of the deficit. But while these may have been good reasons for making the Council hesitate, they do not constitute a ground for shelving the bill. Members of the Upper House should have had the courage of their opinions, and have given a decisive vote.

The loss of the Payment of Members Bill in the Legislative Council will be a cause of serious disappointment to parties interested, but there is no sufficient reason for believing that it will excite much regret in the country. The question is one that may well wait for settlement, for there is no urgency about it. It had been one either of urgency or of acknowledged interest on the part of the public generally, the Ministry would hardly have been divided in opinion upon it. Its introduction just now is at least inopportune. Notwithstanding the rosy colour of the Treasurer's last financial statement, these are not the times for instituting costly experiments. Taking the most favourable view of the matter that we can, the introduction of this new element into our system of government would be an experiment. No one can GARRETT'S shoes. But the value of the services thus offered is quite another thing. The selection of a Minister for Lands will be an exceedingly difficult task for the Ministry. They must endeavour to get for the office a man who not only commands the respect of the Assembly but has made the land question a special study. Whether they will be able to get such a man is somewhat doubtful, but they must do their best. There are some offices in the Government which men of general ability are able to fill satisfactorily, but the Lands Department requires for its head a specialist. Our land law is exceedingly intricate, and its proper administration is a matter of great difficulty; no one who has not attentively studied the question could hope to give a satisfactory account of himself in the position which Mr. GARRETT has just vacated. It is not for us to say who should be the new Minister for Lands, nor even to suggest who he should be. That is a responsibility which necessarily falls upon the Ministry, and it must be discharged by the Ministry. A very serious duty is imposed upon the Government, and we can only hope that it will be performed in a right-minded and judicious way.

Fortunately for the Ministry Mr. GARRETT'S resignation has occurred when Parliament is going into recess. It would not be right to leave the position vacant for any great length of time—it would be scarcely possible to do so, even if the Ministry wished to play with the appointment; but in recess the Government will have more time to look about them than they would have if Parliament were in session. It may possibly be urged that a matter of this importance should not be dealt with when the Assembly is not sitting. An unsatisfactory Minister for Lands, it may be said, might be appointed, and the Assembly would be deprived for two or three months of the opportunity of criticising him. But if such an objection were raised, it would not hold good. It is necessary that the appointment should be made without much delay; if the new Minister should be disappointed of it, it will be time for the Assembly to express its opinion when the House re-assembles. The matter is one which should engage the undivided attention of the Government, and they should spare no effort to secure for the vacant position the very best man obtainable.

This morning we are able to announce a restoration of the cable service. For eighteen days we have been shut out from direct communication with Europe, and have had a good taste of what our isolation really means. There is no country so helpless as ourselves without cable communication—not only because we are far away from the great European centres, but because our national conditions are such that we are comparatively crippled without direct and daily cable communication. In a country where the commercial life was not so active, and where the necessity for all the advantages of prompt communication were not so great, a few weeks of isolation would not count as very seriously against the general progress; but that is not the case with us. Since cable communication was first established there have been a great many interruptions. According to the letter of a correspondent which we publish to-day, there were 30 breakdowns between 1873 and 1883, and the whole time of interruption occupied about 540 days, or 18 months. These breakdowns occurred on the duplicate lines between Port Darwin and Banjowangie. On the Australian land line between Port Darwin and Port Augusta between 1872 and 1883 there were 100 interruptions, covering a period of 201 days. In 1888 there was a breakage, not only in our cable, but in the Russian line as well, and six interruptions occurred within a fortnight.

We have not yet learned definitely the cause of the interruption, but it was in all likelihood the result of volcanic disturbance. These disturbances which have occurred so frequently in the past will, in the nature of things, occur again, and it is only a question of when they will come, and how serious they will be when they do come. Every year that passes sees us in a condition less able to bear the consequences of the interruptions. Business men have grown to depend upon constant communication with Europe that the delay of a few days may mean a loss of thousands of pounds, and when the cases in which this occurs are added together, the general loss and inconvenience are more than we should care to bear. An example of the difficulties that arise was seen in the case of the Alameda. Had there been cable communication, there would now be no apprehension as to the settlement of the maritime labour difficulty. As it is, there will be a suspension of several weeks before the men who were sent by the Seamen's Union will know of the decision arrived at by SPEKKLES and Co. We fortunately were able to get a batch of cables some days ago which brought news up to July 6, but that only met one side of the case. The matter of giving European news to the people is secondary to the financial and mercantile aspect of the question. Fortunately the time taken in re-establishing communication has not been very long, but if as in 1883 four interruptions occurred between Port Darwin and Banjowangie, and took the time for repairing that has been occupied in this case, in what a position would we be! Viewed from the news standpoint the public will have felt the interruption greatly. Nothing very startling has occurred in Europe since the cable was interrupted, but there is little satisfaction after all in the knowledge of this immunity. Though nothing of great moment might occur in the time occupied in repairing ten breakages, on the eleventh occasion Europe might be convulsed, and such a thing could not occur without Australia being greatly affected, not politically perhaps, but in common with other countries, commercially. War is a basis of financial calculation for every country whether it is engaged in conflict or not, and it is directly or indirectly influenced by the struggles of nations. We cannot afford now to lose even one day's communication with Europe. For the last two or three weeks we have been little better off than we were twenty years ago, when our mail-boats used to bring us all our European news, and we were always two months behind the movements of the world's events. The question arises, is there no way out of the difficulty, no means whereby we can be secured against the possibility of an isolation which would mean for us some time a great calamity? The one remedy undoubtedly is an alternate

Mr. GARRETT is no longer Minister for Lands. The announcement to this effect, which was made in the Assembly yesterday by the PREMIER, will cause no surprise, for, after what has taken place during the last week or two, scarcely any other outcome of the situation was possible. It will be seen from the letter published elsewhere that Mr. GARRETT parts from his colleagues on the most friendly terms; he leaves the Ministry, not on account of any Cabinet misunderstanding, but because he is not able to do justice to the office which he had accepted. Greatly as the Government will be inconvenienced by losing their Land Minister, Mr. GARRETT has taken the only course that was consistent with his duty to the country and his duty to himself. He had ceased to efficiently discharge the functions of his office, and he did the right thing to resign. There can be no doubt about this; the question is whether he ought not to have resigned before. Probably he hoped to do better, and his colleagues would naturally endeavour to give him every chance. But he realises that the situation has become intolerable, and he retires from the Ministry with as good a grace as he can. It is to be regretted that during the last few days of his tenure of office accusations of misconduct should have been brought against him. No doubt he has laid himself open to criticism, but these charges were brought in a coarse, unfeeling, and unfair manner. They were made in his absence from the Assembly, and he was therefore placed at a disadvantage. No chivalrous opponent would have acted as the political adversaries of Mr. GARRETT have done.

But whether Mr. GARRETT has committed himself as his opponents say that he has, the fact remains that of late he has not efficiently discharged the duties of his office. He has frequently been absent from his department, and also from the Assembly, and his absences have unfortunately occurred at times when his services were particularly required. While it would be most inconvenient for any Minister to be frequently absent from his office and from Parliament, the inconvenience is especially felt when the Minister for Lands is concerned. The duties of this Minister are of great importance, and they are of such a character that they cannot well be undertaken by a substitute. But a substitute has had to be found of late for the MINISTER FOR LANDS; the PREMIER, whose duties as Colonial Secretary and head of the Government are enough in themselves for one man, has had to take Mr. GARRETT'S place both in the Assembly and in the department. It was the absence of the MINISTER FOR LANDS when the Fencing Bill was under consideration that brought him so conspicuously under the notice of the House. Sir HENRY PARKER, who has not made the land question a special study, had to take charge of the measure, and questions arose which only an expert in land legislation could satisfactorily deal with. Other matters relating to the land came into prominence also, and altogether the Minister's absence was most unfortunate. Able Ministers are badly wanted in these days, but an able Minister who cannot be depended upon comes to be of much value. If the man of genius finds that he is unable to do the work which is demanded of him, his course is to retire; and this is what Mr. GARRETT has done.

From more than one point of view Mr. GARRETT'S resignation is a loss to the Ministry. In the first place, it will be acknowledged that he is one of the few exceptionally able men in the Assembly. He stands head and shoulders above the rank and file. For clearness of head and vigour of speech, Mr. GARRETT stands out amongst our politicians, while as an expert on the land question no one in the Assembly can approach him. He has mastered the subject as no one else has done; he has it completely at his fingers' ends. Mr. GARRETT'S retirement must therefore be a serious loss to the Government, who will find no little difficulty in supplying his place. Men are always to be found ready to undertake any business, from the management of the most trifling affair to the command of the Channel fleet, and if the Ministry look through the ranks of their supporters they may discover one or two, perhaps half a dozen, willing to step into Mr.
